

The Cloze Procedure for
Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire
By J.K. Rowling

What wouldn't he have given to be one of these people, sitting around laughing and talking, with nothing to worry about but homework? He imagined _____ it would have felt _____ be here if his _____ hadn't come out of _____ Goblet of Fire. He _____ be wearing the Invisibility _____, for one thing. Ron _____ be sitting with him. _____ three of them would _____ be happily imagining what _____ dangerous task the school _____ would be facing on _____. He'd have been really _____ forward to it, watching _____ do whatever it was . . . _____ on Cedric with everyone _____, safe in a seat _____ the back of the _____

He wondered how the _____ champions were feeling. Every _____ he had seen Cedric _____, he had been surrounded _____ admirers and looking nervous _____ excited. Harry glimpsed Fleur _____ from time to time _____ the corridors; she looked _____ as she always did, _____ and unruffled. And Krum _____ sat in the library, _____ over books.

Harry thought _____ Sirius, and the tight, _____ knot in his chest _____ to ease slightly. He _____ be speaking to him _____ just over twelve hours, _____ tonight was the night _____ were meeting at the _____ room fire—assuming nothing _____ wrong, as everything else _____ done lately. . . .

“Look, it's _____!” said Hermione.

The back _____ Hagrid's enormous shaggy head— _____ had mercifully abandoned his _____—emerged over the crowd. _____ wondered why he hadn't _____ him at once, as _____ was so large, but _____ up carefully, he saw _____ Hagrid had been leaning _____, talking to Professor Moody. _____ had his usual enormous tankard in front of him, but Moody was drinking from his hip flask.

